The main targets of the project are three fold: to promote the series in Latin America, to inform drivers from that part of the world about the Star Mazda Championship and encourage them to further their careers by racing in North America, and to generate exposure for the sponsors of South American drivers in their home markets.

"It's not all the races, but enough to give our audience south of the border a good idea of what this series is all about," says P-UNO co-founder Pedro Serramalera. "We've been working very hard for a long time on finalizing these broadcasts and are very pleased to be able to finally announce firm air dates and times. This is just the first step in our program to expose South American drivers to the Star Mazda Championship, and we expect the audience for the 2010 season broadcasts to be larger and more knowledgeable."

The 2010 season will mark the 20th year of the Star Mazda Championship presented by Goodyear, one of the most stable and successful open-wheel driver development series in North America. Both title sponsors are major global corporations and their contracts with the Series run through the 2013 season.

The Star Mazda Championship the college basketball, the triple-A baseball of auto racing, a high-speed training ground for future stars of the sport and a major step on the MAZDASPEED Motorsports Development Ladder and automaker-supported scholarship program that provides funding for young champions to move up from karting to the top levels of the sport.

Star Mazda Championship racers are high-tech open-wheel cars powered by Mazda's legendary 'Renesis' rotary; top speed exceed 160 mph and 0 to 60 mph acceleration takes just 2.8 seconds. The 'single-spec' engineering of Star Mazda Championship race cars showcases driving talent instead of big budgets. Expert (30 to 44 years old) and Master (45 and older) categories, run as a race-within-a-race, provides competition for more mature drivers in whom the competitive fire still burns brightly. The series races on major motorsports weekends and the 13-race, 11-weekend 2009 schedule includes races on road courses, street circuits and ovals.

A uniquely diverse group of drivers was part of the Star Mazda Championship series in 2009, including racers from the U.S., Canada, Mexico, Brazil, Argentine, Chile, England, Ireland and Japan as well as drivers ranging in age from 16 to 51. Total prizes for 2009 were $1.5 million, including a Mazda-sponsored drive for the Star Mazda series champion in the next step up the motorsports ladder, the Atlantic Championship Powered by Mazda. With additional exciting announcements to be made in the coming weeks, the 2010 Star Mazda Championship presented by Goodyear is poised to step up to the to new heights of popularity and success.
